READINGS next SUNDAY: Year A	1st Reading	.....	Acts of the Apostles	2:14.22-33
	2nd Reading	....	1st letter of St Peter	1:17-21
	Gospel	.....	Luke	24:13-35

We had hard baked potatoes for supper, and over spiced cabbage, I'm in favour of becoming a vegetarian only if the vegetables are cooked right. (What a hard job cooking is here! But the human warmth in the dining room covers up a multitude of sins.) Another food grievance: onions chopped up in a fruit salad, plus spices and herbs! A sacrilege—to treat foods in this way. Food should be treated with respect, since our Lord left himself to us in the guise of food. His disciples knew him in the breaking of bread.

Dorothy Day

We were created to delight, as God does, in the resident goodness of creation. We were not made to sit around mumbling incantations and watching our insides to see what creation will do for us. Wine does indeed have subjective effects, but they are to be received gratefully and lightly. They are not solemnly important psychological adjustments, but graces, super-added gifts. It was St. Thomas Aquinas who gave the most reasonable and relaxed of all the definitions of temperance. Wine, he said, could lawfully be drunk usque ad hilaritatem, to the point of cheerfulness. It is a happy example of the connection between sanctity and sanity.
