LITURGY OF THE WORD

Although evidence is meagre, there is good reason to believe that a proclamation of God's Word sometimes took place in conjunction with the early celebration of the Eucharist. Apostolic letters were read at Christian assemblies (cf. Colossians 4:16, Philemon 2, Revelation 1:3), and it is likely that at least some of these gatherings were for celebrations of the Eucharist. There is also evidence, e.g. Acts 20:7-8, to suggest that instruction and explanation took place at the Eucharistic meal.

And yet it was only subsequent to the separation of the Eucharist from the meal that there developed a more formal scripture service whose structure was somewhat influenced by the morning prayer service held in the synagogue.

Although the liturgy of the Word and liturgy of the Eucharist were often celebrated independently of each other, their general fusion occurred in the east by the early sixth century. In some regions of the west, however, isolated examples of the Mass beginning without a Word service can be found at a later date.

Each rite developed its own number and selection of readings. Whereas four or even six readings occur in some eastern rites, the general rule is three readings, usually the prophets, the apostles, and the gospel. Many scholars believe that Rome originally had three readings, an arrangement restored on Sundays and major feasts by the present lectionary.

The scriptures were primitively read in a semi-continuous manner: the reader read the whole book from beginning to end although certain verses or chapters were omitted. But with the development of the liturgical year, a system of fixed and related readings was gradually established to highlight particular feasts or seasons and to give thematic unity to the readings.

The lectionary arranges the Sunday readings in a three-year cycle, the characteristic feature of each year being the gospel: year A is based on Matthew, year B on Mark, and year C on Luke. St John's gospel occurs on the first Sundays of Lent, during the Easter season, and on certain Sundays during year B. For weekdays there is a two-year cycle: the gospels remain the same each year but the first reading varies.
