SECOND READING

For centuries the Roman liturgy used the term "epistle" to designate the reading which preceded the gospel even when this reading was not taken from a New Testament letter. In the east, however, the reading before the gospel was simply called "the Apostle," a designation suitable for all the books of the New Testament which come down to us from the Church of the apostles.

Today a New Testament text is always given as the second reading on Sundays and major feasts. Although the choice of the text was made quite independently of the other two readings, during certain seasons passages have been selected to correspond with the mystery being celebrated at a particular time of the liturgical year. For example, during the Christmas season there is a successive reading from John's First Letter which recounts the mystery of love made incarnate in Christ.

Silence should be observed at designated times as part of the celebration. Its character will depend on the time it occurs in the particular celebration.....At ..... the conclusion of a reading .....each one meditates briefly on what they have heard.....

In the second reading the assembly encounters the early Church living its Christian faith. The witness of the apostolic community provides an example for all time since Christians of every age are to recall the love of the Father enfleshed in Christ, the good news of redemption, the duty of Christian love. All followers of Jesus are to live decently and without blemish, to be tolerant of one another, to be steadfast in the faith.
