THE BLESSING PRAYERS

Until the eleventh century the Roman Mass knew only one prayer during the preparation rite, i.e. the prayer said over the gifts immediately before the eucharistic prayer. But once the procession with the gifts began to disappear, various prayers were added to accompany and fill out the actions of the rite. Such texts, first appearing outside Rome, varied in different missals till they were standardized by the Missal of Pius V (1570). Designed to deepen the spirituality of the priest, they often employed sacrificial terminology and at times were even understood as anticipating the meaning of the eucharistic prayer.

The order of Mass not only reduces the number of these prayers but also, to avoid possible misunderstanding, focuses on praise of God rather than on offering. The priest raises the bread a little above the altar and prays a formula, modelled on a Jewish table prayer, which blesses or praises God as the creator of the world for the gift of bread. After the cup has been prepared, the priest says a similar prayer praising the Father for the gift of wine. At the conclusion of each prayer the faithful may, if fitting, make an acclamation.

These texts, which are primarily private prayers of the priest, recall the source, meaning, and goal of the gifts. God is praised for the works of his creation. Bread and wine, being the God-given fruits of the earth, symbolize our world, our life, and our labour. They are presented in view of what they will become, i.e. our bread of life and our spiritual drink.

The mixing of water and wine is an ancient liturgical practice in both east and west. Because of the wine's heavy texture it became customary in both secular and religious usage to dilute the wine with water to render it less strong. Early Christians continued this custom in the celebration of the eucharist. This utilitarian action was soon endowed with a symbolic interpretation. In the west the mingling came to represent the union of Christ with the faithful: just as wine receives water, so Christ takes us and our sins to himself. The eastern interpretation was that the wine and water represent the divine and human nature in Christ. At Rome the rite was eventually given a prayer whose text was taken from an ancient Christmas oration expressing both symbolic meanings. Today an abbreviated version of this prayer is said quietly by the priest.
